Undergrad Students Discover Whole Person Care

Across the United States, Students Grasp that Healthcare Can Be a Platform for Strategic Ministry

"I had no idea that I could pray with patients." "I have seen Christian doctors be extra-nice to their patients, but I had never met a doctor who actually talked with patients about God."

These are just some of the comments that we've heard and read over the last few weeks.

Since Christmas, our ministry has been busy making appearances at numerous Cru undergrad student conferences across the nation. From New York to Minneapolis to Houston to Denver to Los Angeles and many points in between, more Christian students now have a crystal-clear understanding of how they might serve Christ in the healthcare professions.

And this is so critical. When we connect with undergrad students, many want to serve Jesus in healthcare, but they do not know if or how they could do this. Some have been told by their professors that they should "leave their religion" completely out of patient care. Others have been told that caring for the spiritual needs of their patients is illegal and unethical. While nothing could be further from the truth, there has been no one to tell them otherwise. Until now.

You have helped take away the lies and you have helped provide the truth to these young Christ-followers who are often so eager to live out their faith.

More, you helped do the same for those who were leading the sessions. You see, each conference presenter—pharmacists, nurses, physicians, residents—learned to do spiritual care through this ministry. At one time, they did not know if or how they could share appropriately "the hope that is in them".

Years ago, you helped these professionals learn to do this. Now they have passed on their vision to a new wave of young Christians who are eager to serve Christ through their work and patient contact.

Thank you for all you do to make this possible. You continue to make a difference!
