

Mentors

“To advise or train.” That’s what a mentor does. Earlier today, we were blessed to visit with Rusty Wright, a key mentor in Bob’s life.

When Bob was an undergrad student at Mississippi State University, he met Rusty, a popular and effective traveling speaker with Cru. That week at MSU, Rusty spoke to hundreds on popular student topics such as dating, sex, personal success, etc. Rusty tactfully addressed these topics from a Christian perspective and was able to show how a relationship with God made possible through Jesus was the key to meaningful relationships and career success. At those lectures, many came to Christ.

Years later, Bob, on staff with Cru, arrived in California to begin a season of work with Rusty. Rusty was more than a boss to Bob, he became a trusted friend and mentor. And that mentoring covered several areas—public speaking, organizational networking and leadership, writing. Whenever Bob spoke—on a local campus, in a secular university class, or in a local church—Rusty would be there. And afterwards, he would take Bob out for a time of encouragement, critique, review, and practical suggestions for improvement.

Today, Bob utilizes these skills daily. In a few weeks, we will lead another whole person care conference at Harvard Medical School. Next month, Bob will be lecturing on whole person care to a mixed audience of Christians and secularists at The Ohio State University College of Medicine and again in January at the University of Colorado School of Medicine.

Thank you, Rusty, for your involvement in our lives and ministry. For the glory of God, we pray that we can multiple your investments in the lives of healthcare professionals and students worldwide. And thank you for joining with us in this ministry of spiritual multiplication.

Chillin' with Caleb!
